WE MISS HIM SO.

We miss him so; when the days are And summer's glow like a fair smile

And the lonely chill of the vacant halls, Where his voice did ring through the happy years.

That his smile did light as a star oh the silence now and the gleam of

We miss him so-we miss him so!

And sometimes forgetting the dark of We listen at eve for his step on the

And wait for his greeting to gladden the

Like a dawning joy that has followed But fast in the shadows, the wrecks of the sweet, Fair hopes of all future, lie broken and

And ne'er o'er the sill comes the sound of We miss him so, ah we miss him so! -H. C. P.

The match between the Country club golf team and the Elmira club is off today, as the course at Elmira is not yet ready for the game. It is not certain whether the Elmira team will come down on the Fourth, according to the schedule. A handicap will be played this afternoon. The Country club will be a scene of great galety on that night, for a profusion of fireworks will be set off and Bauer's band will give the most brilliant open-air concert of the season. It is expected that all the Country club members at home, with many out-of-town guests, will be present.

Mr. J. H. Brooks made a great record over the old course of nine holes this week, with a score of 34. The best score yet made is that of 31 by Gourley, the professional player.

"Rupert of Hentzau" (Henry Holt & Co.) is a book which everybody will read, for our old friends, Sept, Fritz and Flavia, troop through the fair glades of Zenda even though Black Michael lies dead and Rassendyll tells not the wild, swift story of Raritania's king and lovely queen. It is broad and full of action as was the Prisoner of Zenda, and contains eight full-page illustrations by C. D. Gibson, in work which bears no hint of the insolent carelessness of some of his late drawings. The book is beautifully bound and is uniform with the new edition of the Prisoner of Zenda, which will hereafter be published only in this form, the cheap editions having been discon-

A pretty afternoon wedding was that in St. Peter's cathedral Wednesday afternoon. The contracting parties were James Gavin, of Prospect avenue, and Miss Sara Gordon, of Stone avenue. Miss Margaret Flaherty was maid of honor and Anthony Gordon groomsman. The party entered the church to the strains of the march from Lohengrin, and were met at the altar railing by Rev. J. J. B. Feeley, who united the couple. During the ceremony Professor Schilling ren-dered "O Promise Me." For a recessional Mendelssohn's march was played. The wedding dinner was served at the bride's home, 821 Stone avenue, and was attended only by the members of the families of the couple. The bride was attired in a gown of white taffeta. Her attendant wore organdie over green, and carried pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Gavin left for a trip to New York, Boston and Washington. Upon their return they will reside at

Sitiation with the straight ONE WOMAN'S VIEWS. 3MMMMMMMMMMM

Bless the person who first invented the shirt waist. It is a boon to feminity, second only to the comforts of religion. The time was when the shirt waist was not a joy forever. It used to bag in the wrong places and draw in folds where it ought to bag. It was years before any decent show of friendliness could be arranged between it and the skirt worn by the average woman. The waist would pull up and the skirt would pull down and there was either a display of garments which custom has somewhat generally determined should remain in seclusion, or else the mechanism of the skirt belt with a profusion of safety pins was made evident with a degree of frankness which did not leave enough to the imagination.

Then there were the mannish shirt waists with shiny fronts and other accessories which made them difficult to distinguish from the ones worn by your brother. They were horrors as the women soon discovered. Then came on those big sleeved affairs which when they were blown up by the summer breezes made a girl look as if she were about to be taken skyward by the balloon process. This year the shirt waists are perfection. They make a stylish girl look Gibsony and swell. There are glorified waists that fill you with a desire to take them off the wearer and appropriate them to your own use. And then-well, there are others. I know a little lady who is plump and is always carefully gowned, who desires the sentiment employed in her obituary notice. "She never wore a shirt waist." While this is not intended as a reflection on the women of all sizes and shapes who blithesomely don shirt waists feeling only the utmost satisfaction in their own appearance and comfort it still indicates that there are some people who entertain occasional doubts as to their ability to "wear anything you know," But it would be a great pity to deny feeted that it is now the exception when you see a woman whose skirt, nected. With the pretty pins and fastenings now to be found there is small gards the shirt waist and accessories.

Said a rather critical observer the ther day, "I don't know whether the bicycle is to blame for untidyness in dress or not, but certain it is that some women who ride do look slovenly. That is the only word to express it. I saw a girl this morning who in street dress always is stunningly stylish. Out on a wheel she simply looks tough. In the first place her hair is always flying wildly and her hat is usually on one side. Then she wears a skirt unnecessarily short by several inches and that skirt has the general appearance of having been used to clean the wheel after the last ride Her shoes are a sight and if there was anything she used to be fastidous about it was her feet. As to hats, I don't know why bicyclists don't wear sailors, which are almost universally becoming. Some of the headgear they put on looks for all the world as if it had been clawed out of the ash heap. I think the bicycle is responsible for a great deal besides humpy backs and improvement of health.

She was a pretty young woman in a spotless white suit and she came tearing into a store where she thought they kept revenue stamps. "Just horrid." she declared, " I never did want this war anyway. When it came to fixing up boxes with cake and sofa pillows and things for the poor soldiers I didn't mind, and was wiling to send a lot of that last jelly of mine that didn't jell very well; but as for having to put stamps on everything I do object. Here they wanted me to pay two dollars for a check book down at the bank, when they used to be glad to give me all the check books I could use for nothing with my name stamped on in the bargain. I just told them I shouldn't do it, but would remove my account to some other bank and I'm going to send Tom down to Impure blood. stout people about the only really com- get me a check book. I told Matt, the gardner, that he would have excuse for untidy appearance as re- to pay for the tax on beer and he says he isn't going to drink another drop and I'll just bet the government will see what a mistake has been made, for there are lots of others who won't pay for stamps even if they have to go without checks and telephone messages and beer and things. Tom says there is a tax on golf balls and I think that is simply outrageous, for the way I do use balls will ruin me if I have to put stamps on every one. asked Tom if one couldn't pry the stamp off and use it again but he suggested that if I could find the stamp, the ball would be there too, and it wouldn't be necessary to dislodge the stamp, Tom thinks he's very smart. Anyhow I'm going to see if there isn't some way to outwit the overnment in this stamp business, if I have to stay awake nights to do it." And the store man signed and remarked softly, "This is feminine patriotism! and she had three flag hat pins in her sailor." Saucy Bess.
